“A Land We Can Share”: Teaching Literacy to Students with Autism

Monday, February 1, 2010

Presenter

Paula Kluth, Ph.D,

Target Audience: The target audience for this workshop will include Special Education Teachers, Speech Language Pathologists, Special Education Instructional Support staff, Paraprofessionals, Reading Specialists, and General Educators serving students in a K-12 classroom with autism.

Description: During this interactive session, Paula will explain how many learners have been excluded from reading and writing experiences that are inclusive, rich, challenging, and meaningful. She will discuss trends in literacy instruction for those with autism labels and examine how teachers can respond to communication differences, sensory differences, movement differences, and learning differences during literacy lessons in their inclusive classrooms. Participants will also learn some strategies for including and supporting students with autism in reading, writing, sp, fluency, and vocabulary will be highlighted. Come and learn about how we can give all students- including those autism, Down syndrome, and low-incidence disabilities- access to the literate community.

Participants will also receive the book “A Land We Can Share: Teaching Literacy to Children with Autism”, authored by the presenter.
